DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Darla O’Brien has been dead for 14 years. Why is she still the most important person in the lives of Glory and her father? Should she be?

A quote from the poet Walt Whitman begins the novel: “The future is no more uncertain than the present.” What does Whitman mean by that? Do you agree with him? Why do you think the author opened her book this way?

Photographic terms, Glory discovers, can also be applied to real life. What does “max black” mean for pictures, and for people? What does it mean for a photo, and for a person, to be exposed but not developed?

“The Origin of Everything” is the name Glory gives to her sketchbook. Why do you think she chose such an ambitious title? Is she being serious? Sarcastic? What is the purpose of Glory’s sketchbook?

“Why People Take Pictures” was the title of Darla O’Brien’s sketchbook. Why did Darla O’Brien take pictures? Why does Glory? Why do you?

“Complicated” is how Glory describes her friendship with Ellie (page 2). How is that an understatement? What does Glory like about Ellie? What does she dislike? At the end of the novel, why does she give Ellie such a generous gift? What do you think Ellie will do with it?

Petrified bat juice isn’t anyone’s idea of a treat, so why do Glory and Ellie drink it? What drew them to the dead bat in the first place? What makes them think the bat might be God?

Can you draw any parallels between the capabilities of bats and the powers that Glory and Ellie gain?

“Free yourself,” Ellie says on the night they drink the bat juice (page 51). “Have the courage.” What does Glory need to free herself from? What about Ellie? Does each find the courage? Why or why not?

Ellie’s mother tried to keep her daughter away from popular culture, but according to Glory (page 41), “Ellie knew what all girls knew—we were here to be whatever men wanted us to be.” Do you agree? What makes it difficult for a young woman to be who she wants to be, not what some men may expect her to be?

Glory envisions a second American Civil War, the result of deep divisions within the country about the role of women. How divided do you think America is right now? How deep are regional differences about women’s rights? How plausible do you find Glory’s vision of the future?

Why do you think Darla O’Brien killed herself? What role did her husband play in her unhappiness? Her neighbor? Her daughter? Her gender? Her photography?

Why is Peter smiling at strangers in the mall? How does Glory’s reaction to his experiment change both of their lives?

“I didn’t know how to have fun,” Glory claims at the start of her surprise party (page 254), yet she does have fun. How does the party affect her opinion of her classmates? Her aunt? Herself?

By the novel’s end, Glory is convinced that her transmissions from the past and the future were true. What is her proof? Do you agree? What else might explain her visions?

Why is Glory writing “Glory O’Brien’s History of the Future”? Who is she writing it for? How does she become the hero of her story?
